Program Accomplishment: Amazon Research Initiative for Educators The Amazon Research Initiative for Educators (ARIE) is a 10-day immersive field research program held July 1120, 2025, in the Peruvian Amazon. The program placed K12 educators alongside tropical researchers, Peruvian graduate students, local guides, and Indigenous partners to engage in authentic, long-term biodiversity research. Rather than simulating inquiry, educators contributed directly to ongoing field research spanning plant phenology, animal behavior, aquatic systems, and community-based conservation. Participants collected data, refined research questions, and navigated uncertainty in real time, experiencing science as a collaborative, human process rooted in place and partnership. Educators returned to their classrooms ready to engage students with authentic research data and inquiry-driven learning that reflects science as it is actually practiced. In 2025, the program engaged 21 K12 educators from 9 states, Peru, and Mexico, supported by 7 tropical researchers, 6 community partners, and 8 research projects. The organization offset $22,400 of participant program and travel costs, expanding access to field-based research experiences for educators. The program's alumni had a classroom impact on more than 2,000 students nationwide.

Part and Line Number: Part III, line 29

Program Accomplishment: Educator Academy in the Amazon The Educator Academy in the Amazon is a 10-day immersive professional development program held July 110, 2025, in the Peruvian Amazon. The program placed K12 and non-formal educators in the field alongside Peruvian naturalists, scientists, and Morpho Institute faculty to engage in place-based inquiry rooted in observation, questioning, and reflection. The rainforest served as the primary curriculum, with educators participating as learners rather than content recipients. Field journals, conversations with Indigenous community members, and collaboration with local experts grounded scientific inquiry in lived experience and reinforced the relational nature of conservation. Educators returned to their classrooms with a pedagogy rooted in awe and inquiry, translating their Amazon experiences into place-based learning that connects students to local and global ecosystems. In 2025, the program served 21 educators from 11 states, Washington D.C., and Canada. Participants included 9 elementary, 7 high school, 4 middle school, and 1 non-formal educator. The organization offset $15,500 in participant program and travel costs, broadening access to field-based conservation education. The program's alumni had a classroom impact on more than 3,000 students nationwide.

Part and Line Number: Part III, line 30

Program Accomplishment: Amazon Scholarship Fund The Morpho Institute's Amazon Scholarship Fund advances equity in conservation education by ensuring that financial barriers do not limit access to transformative field-based learning in the Peruvian Amazon. The fund supports educators who demonstrate the capacity to multiply impact far beyond a single field experience, bringing inquiry-based, place-based learning back to students, schools, and communities across the country. Named awards, including the Dr. John Alcock Fellowship, the Courtney R. Wilson Fellowship, and the Marissa E. Copan Fellowship, support educators ready to lead with inquiry, awe, and purpose. By expanding who gets to participate in conservation education, the fund strengthens the diversity, reach, and long-term effectiveness of Morpho Institute's mission. In 2025, the organization supported 23 educators through the fund, offsetting $30,665 in travel costs and waiving $7,245 in program fees, making field-based conservation education accessible to educators who would not otherwise have been able to participate. As access expands, conservation education becomes more representative, more effective, and more enduring in its impact on students and communities nationwide.
